3. Unfortunately, the messages they give don't always tell you there is a problem - or what the problem is. To create the screen and process, I tried to register using a different user name but the same email and got a "Try again later" message, not a "That email is already registered".
4. Anyhow, once you are registered, your user name will replace the "Sign Up" and "Log In"

5. If you aren't already there, go to the blog:

6. Once there, read or go to the bottom of the blog and click on Share your thoughts comment, you will need to register first. So please select the "Sign up" choice and proceed to register. You will receive an email so that you can confirm and complete the registration. It will also provide you with a password. Once you get that info, you can then choose "Log in", which you will have to select whenever you want to comment (unless you want to stay logged in all the time).

Choose the falcon blog page (which you hopefully have bookmarked) and then scroll down to where it says "Share your thoughts" – you may have to refresh your screen to get this to work (I don't have control over any of this – please remember). You should get a box where you can enter your comment.

Was that clear as mud? Best I can do.

Comment to me if you can!

A screenshot of the comment interface. It shows a large text input box with a red arrow pointing to it and the text "Enter your comments" in red. Below the box, it says "2000 characters left". To the right of the box are social media share icons for Facebook and Twitter, and a yellow button labeled "POST MY REPLY" with a red arrow pointing to it.

8. Done!
